Expats in Spain 'should learn language'

July 18th, 2008

People who are thinking of relocating to Spain have been encouraged to start learning the language.

According to Property Showrooms, people in the European country are generally very hospitable to foreign expatriates.

However, the firm said they could build stronger relations with Spanish nationals if they know a few key words and phrases.

Cary Johnston, spokesperson for Property Showrooms, commented: "The Spanish will warm to you even more if you make an effort to speak a few words in the local language."

He added that Spain offers a quality of life which is "second to none", partly because it has attractions such as year-round sunshine.

This, combined with the better air quality, means that people can feel healthier both physically and mentally.

According to the Association of International Property Professionals, Spain is currently the most popular location for British buyers.

Figures showed that the country accounted for more than a quarter of all overseas purchases last year.
